this storm will pass

opening friday september 11, 17.00 - 20.00 hrs.

exhibition runs until september 26, 2020

This storm will pass is first and foremost a festival structured around an exhibition taking place over a three-week period in September at Bradwolff Projects. In light of the corona crisis, the festival's content is adapting to the shape of our changing reality. This storm will pass is a relay of performances, literary interventions and musical contributions around an interactive exhibition. Secondly, This storm will pass is an occasion for all of us to newly reflect on the world around us. Since the outbreak of the coronavirus, the world looks different and our thinking takes on new forms. In times of crisis, we must ask ourselves what we can do now that previously seemed less feasible. This storm will pass offers the opportunity to translate the power of reflection into art and of art back into everyday life.

Every weekend of September, the festival will be accompanied by literary, musical, philosophical and poetic contributions from various artists, writers and thinkers. All of whom are well acquainted with the possibility of transforming their inquisitive artistic capacity into a direct reflection on reality. First to take up the relay baton are the painters. With each new work, painters open the window to our society, on issues such as climate change, inclusivity and liberation movements. Marc Raven, Urs Moore, Bas van den Hurk and Jochem van Laarhoven will be the first to contribute to This storm will pass by shaping their ideas into matter. They will talk to Dominic van den Boogerd on Sunday 13th September during an Art Brunch from 2 - 5 pm. RSVP: info@burobradwolff.nl

Finally, literary and musical voices will take over the baton from the visitor and artist to translate it into texts written for the festival. Their texts will reflect on the given and self-evident against the unknown and mysterious that both art and our daily life have to offer – translating the new in light of the old.

The entire festival is safe to visit, stay home if you encounter complaints and keep your distance from one another. This exhibition takes place, respecting Corona safety rules & regulations.
